Prizes Lending Bill

WASHINGTON—(AP)—Secretary Morgenthau praised the president's $2,000,000,000 lending bill Tuesday as a "real advance toward the goal of bringing our governmental expenditures within our receipts."

Testifying before the senate banking committee, the Treasury head said he liked the idea of lending billions of dollars for self-liquidating projects.

Weiss, Louisiana No. 2 Man, Is Held

One of Two New Orleans Bosses Is Indicted in LSU Scandal

NEW ORLEANS—(AP)—Seymour Weiss, New York and New Orleans hotel man and Louisiana's No. 2 politician next to Robert S. Maestri of New Orleans, was indicted along with four other persons by a federal grand jury here Monday on two counts of using the mails to defraud.

The others named were Dr. James Monroe Smith, former president of Louisiana State University now under 24 indictments ranging from forgery to embezzlement, Louis C. Lesage, special assistant to the president of the Standard Oil Company of Louisiana; Monte E. Hart, member of the contract firm of Caldwell Brothers and Hart which has done much state construction during the past decade, and J. Emory Adams, nephew of Mrs. James Monroe Smith, also under indictment at Baton Rouge.

Gov. Earl K. Long made a quick trip from Baton Rouge to New Orleans and conferred with Mayor Robert S. Maestri of New Orleans in the Roosevelt hotel, which is owned by Weiss. Long said he had no comment.

The indictments charged the five men with defrauding the Louisiana State University, the state and taxpayers in a deal involving fixtures of the Bienville hotel in New Orleans, which was purchased by the university several years ago.

The charges carrying a penalty of five years in jail or a fine of $10,000 or both. Bond for the men was set at $10,000 each by Judge Wayne C. Harph, nephew of Senator Borah (Rep. Ind.) who made the indictments public.

The startling federal action reaching to the very top of the lieutenants who surrounded Huey P. Long when he ruled Louisiana came shortly after another of Long's former lieutenants, former Gov. Richard W. Leche, had been called in by a grand jury at Baton Rouge to tell what he knows of the scandals at State University which have erupted into a state-wide investigation of many political activities.

Leche was informed in the federal grand jury action as he left the Baton Rouge jury room and smilingly commented: "Business is picking up."

The parish grand jury already has indicted eight persons, including Smith and state Senator Dr. Clarence Lorio, another leading state politician, on embezzlement of university materials and funds.

The indictment today charged Weiss and the others with the majority of the $75,000 obtained from the university through a double sale of the equipment of the hotel, purchased to be used as a nurses home for the University Medical Center in New Orleans.

Hart is alleged to have received the full $75,000 which was paid to the National Equipment Company, Inc., controlled by Hart, and that he subsequently paid over or caused to be paid over $14,000 to Smith, $11,000 to Adams, $14,000 to Weiss, $5,500 to Lesage and $10,000 to himself.

"All of the defendants agreed among themselves that they would lend their mutual aid and assistance in effecting the said pretended sale and in making a surreptitious distribution of the said sum of $75,000," the indictment read.

Refunding Bill Is Victorious in Test Vote in the House

Bailey Forces Turn Down Probe Resolution by Vote 38 to 36

FLOOD OF CHANGES

Despite Bailey's Plea for Passage, 33 Amendments Proposed

LITTLE ROCK—(AP)—In the first floor fight on Governor Bailey's 140-million-dollar highway bond refunding bill, the administration won a narrow two-vote victory in the house Tuesday by defeating a resolution seeking information about interest rates to be paid on the proposed new bond issue.

The Bailey forces beat down 38 to 36 on a standing vote a resolution by Anti-Administrationist Johnston of Johnson county proposing appointment of a five-member committee to ascertain what rate of interest should be fixed, and whether any commitments had already been made on the subject.

Asserting there had been published reports that Governor Bailey had entered into a tentative contract with an Eastern financial syndicate for the sale of bonds, and that the interest rate had been agreed upon in negotiations, Johnston said:

"This resolution won't hurt a thing. It is just asking for information which we are entitled to receive."

Brickhouse of Pulaski county, administrative leader, among those speaking against the resolution, said: "I am not worried about the interest rate because I know and you know the governor will get the best rate he can."

Despite two pleas of the governor that the bill be passed as written, Wesley of Franklin, Horton of Craighead, Moncrief of Arkansas, and Riales of Polk, offered 21 amendments during the morning, running up to 33 the number on the desk awaiting action.

Vesey Proposals Beaten

LITTLE ROCK—The House's 15-member committee on refunding gave a "do pass" recommendation to Governor Bailey's $140,537,000 highway bond refunding bill Monday night. The vote was seven to three. One taxpayer, Fred Vener, Little Rock business man was heard.

The recommendation was returned at a brief session, during which informal comments indicated a desire on the part of several members to attend the Little Rock Travelers-Memphis Chiefs baseball game Monday night.

The committee charged the five men with defrauding the Louisiana State University, the state and taxpayers in a deal involving fixtures of the Bienville hotel in New Orleans, which was purchased by the university several years ago.

The charges carrying a penalty of five years in jail or a fine of $10,000 or both. Bond for the men was set at $10,000 each by Judge Wayne C. Harph, nephew of Senator Borah (Rep. Ind.) who made the indictments public.

These farms cover more than 60,000 acres.

Similar practices are being established on farms in the 1,020,000-acre Terre Haute-Bodeaw Soil Conservation District, which is beginning operations in Hempstead, Nevada and Lafayette counties. Riley Lewellen of Hope is chairman of the board of supervisors.

These pictures illustrate the extensive improvements being made on Arkansas pastures to provide a more effective erosion resisting land cover and to insure greater economic returns from land utilized as pasture. The upper left photo shows newly constructed contour ridges which catch and hold rainfall to aid grass growth and to help prevent washing. The picture at the upper right shows low, broad-based contour pasture ridges. The photograph at the lower left is of a 41-acre field planted solid to bur clover, which provides additional grazing for livestock. The clover, however, is permitted to produce a good crop growth to be turned under for green manure and to be followed by a feed crop. The lower right picture shows Hereford beef cows grazing on a contour ridged pasture. Surveys show that on some ridged pastures grass growth is twice as great on and back of the ridges as on unridged areas since the extra water backed up during grazing on a contour ridged pasture is retained for plant growth.

Similar pasture programs are being followed by farmers in the work areas of the Soil Conservation Service Projects and CCC Camp here, which will be among the hosts at a conservation field day at the Camp Tuesday, July 25.

Two Charge Gross Irregularities in Bearden's Office

Just Who the Charges Are Against Not Made Public

WARRANTS ISSUED

Grand Jury Makes Report to Circuit Court at Noon Tuesday

BULLETIN

Circuit Clerk Ralph Bailey admitted in a telephone conversation with The Star from Washington at 3:15 p. m. Tuesday that warrants had been issued for five persons indicted by the Hempstead county grand jury, but said he was not at liberty to disclose the names until the warrants had been returned to him after being served by Sheriff C. E. Baker.

Mr. Bailey said he would turn the warrants over to Sheriff Baker during the afternoon.

Alleged irregularities in the Hempstead county sheriff and collector's office in 1938 was contained in a report submitted to circuit court here at 11:30 a. m. Tuesday by a grand jury which had been in session a day and a half.

A paragraph in the grand jury's report said:

"We have examined into the conduct of the sheriff and collector's office for the year 1938 and have found gross irregularities in the conduct of said office and have indicted two persons in connection therewith."

The grand returned a total of five indictments, three of them secret, pending the filing of charges and the arrest of three defendants. The report said 40 witnesses had been examined.

Text of Report

The text of the grand jury report: "We, your grand jury, for the April adjournment of the Hempstead circuit court, 1939, beg to report as follows:

"We have examined into all the crimes that have come to our knowledge and have found indictments in all cases where we thought the evidence was sufficient, and in so doing we have examined 40 witnesses and have returned into open court five indictments."

"We have examined into the conduct of the sheriff and collector's office for the year 1938 and have found gross irregularities in the conduct of said office and have indicted two persons in connection therewith."

"We are glad to report that the present officers of the county are performing their duties well and faithfully."

"We wish to thank the court and all the officers of the court for the courtesies they have shown us, and especially do we thank the city and municipal officials for their courtesies in allowing us to use the municipal court room, and for their attention to our needs and wants, and having completed, we now ask to be discharged."

The report was signed by J. Mark Jackson, foreman, and J. M. Duffie, clerk. Following the reading of the report, Circuit Judge Dexter Bush discharged the jury, heard several cases already pending and then adjourned court until the October term.

Audit Report Filed

Accountants in the office of State Comptroller J. O. Goff filed April 15, 1939, a report covering an audit of financial affairs of Hempstead county in which it charged that J. E. Bearden, former sheriff and collector, is due the county $2,492.75 for settlement of regular and delinquent taxes collected in 1938 and $11,826.65 in fines assessed in circuit, justice of the peace and municipal courts.

The April 15 report continued: "We have repeatedly asked that statements be filed with the county court of Hempstead county setting out the fines and any miscellaneous credits that should be due on said fines, but these statements were not and have not been filed," the audit report said.

"Therefore, we recommend that the prosecuting attorney of that county immediately make demand upon Mr. Bearden and his bondsmen for the sum of $11,826.65 of fines, also call upon him for the amount of moneys due through tax collections. These settlements should be made immediately," the audit report continued.

The Means of Danzig Settlement Are at Hand

Whether the Danzig affair comes to crisis and war, no one yet knows. But if it does, it is just as well for the world to remember that there is not the faintest excuse for this happening.

The means of a peaceful Danzig settlement are at hand. Danzig is an artificial political-creation of the Versailles Treaty, whose administration is in the hands of the League of Nations.

The league's commissioner, Dr. Karl Burckhardt, is on hand in that city. He is a Swiss, and therefore neutral in the Danzig controversy. He is a scholarly man, devoted to peace and justice.

Let it be granted that the league is not what it ought to be, nor even what it was. Let it be granted that Germany is no longer a member of the league, and therefore no longer bound by it.

Nevertheless, not enough is being said about the fact that the Danzig situation can be peacefully settled. If it is not, it will be because somebody doesn't want to settle it peacefully.

Both Germany and Poland have claims in Danzig. The Germans have a claim to the city based on the fact that most of its people are Germans and presumably would like to come under the German system. The Poles have a claim based on the fact that their country must have free access to the Baltic.

Very well. Are these claims mutually exclusive?

Is there no way in which Germany could have Danzig, yet Poland be assured of a free outlet to the Baltic for its growing commerce? There must be such a way, given the merest shred of the will to find it.

The Poles have developed their own port city of Gdynia on the Baltic. What they need is assurance of the use of that port, equal assurance with Germany that they can use the Vistula basin which runs up through the neutralized corridor to the open Baltic and the world's trade. The Poles have in large part abandoned Danzig anywhere, as a shipping point, Germany claims it wishes only to restore Germans to the Reich.

What a silly thing to have a world war about! Here are two neighboring nations at daggers drawn over the kind of question that sensible, sane men are settling every day all over the world. And here a neutral referee is ready, willing, and anxious to cooperate in finding a solution which will give each party most of what he wants.

Failure to make use of the league commissioner on the spot at Danzig will show the world that what is desired is not a just solution, but an excuse for doing something else that has nothing to do with the actual needs or rights of the parties involved.

Those World's Fairs Will Play Hob With the Feet—Watch 'Em!

Now that two world's fairs are operating in different parts of the country, and now that hundreds of thousands of Americans are tramping miles over soft courses, many people's attention will be forcibly directed to their feet. During the Chicago Century of Progress Exposition so many people suffered with painful feet that "World's Fair feet" almost came to be a standard diagnosis.

The most common cause of tired, aching feet, is of course, strain on the muscles and the ligaments, which may be brought about by several different factors. An acute strain of the foot develops rapidly and is associated with a severe pain below the instep due to stretching of the ligaments. Chronic strain is also associated with from an attempt to walk too soon after a long illness; sometimes it is associated with a rapid increase in the weight of a body which puts too much pressure on the tissue of the foot; sometimes it is associated with difficulties affecting the circulation of the blood in the foot and, in other instances particularly in women, it is associated with the wearing of shoes that are not adapted to weight-bearing or walking. The most common faults are heels that are too high; toes that are too narrow, shoes that are too wide or fragile, and soles of the shoes that are too thin.

The first indication for relief is to rest the overstrained ligaments. If there is swelling, there must be rest in bed with the feet elevated, and sometimes with the application of heat to the feet. In such cases also alternate application of hot and cold water—1/2 minutes of hot and 1/2 minute of cold—repeated five to ten times morning and night, will help to improve the circulation of the blood in the feet. If there are varicose veins, these should have the attention of a physician.

Especially important is the selection of shoes suitable to the weight that is to be borne and to the amount of walking that is to be done.

Specialists in orthopedic surgery are competent to examine the feet and pads will help to distribute the weight suitably in the shoes and on the feet.

The House By the Side of the Road

There are hermit souls that live withdrawn
In the place of their self-content;
There are souls like stars that dwell apart.

In a fellowless firmament;
There are pioneer souls that blaze their paths
Where highways never ran—
But let me live by the side of the road

And be a friend to man.
Let me live in a house by the side of the road,
Where the race of men go by—
The men who are good and the men who are bad,

As good and as bad as I.
I would not sit in the corner's seat,
Or hurt the cynic's ban—
Let me live in the house by the side of the road
And be a friend to man.

Roanoke Islanders Work Now, Thanks to Success in Play

By NEA Service

MANTEO, N. C. — Those who say that art is all right in its place but that place is not in the realm of practically things will be surprised—if not sea back on their heels—by the story of "The Lost Colony," a play which became a cure for unemployment.

For more decades than anybody could remember, the people of Roanoke Island, of the coast of North Carolina, had been earning their livelihood in the same old ways: fishing, boat-building, a little truck-gardening, a little storekeeping, a little game-hunting. Some were employed by the U. S. Coast Guard Service, for Roanoke Island is the "ship graveyard of the Atlantic." Life was hard and money infrequent. There was only one brick building on the island, built in 1904. The rest were clapboard. But this was a New York City slum.

Tradition had it that the Roanoke Islanders descended from the famous lost colonists—a group of 121 who established the first English colony in the New World. Arriving there in 1585, the 121 built Fort Raleigh, Virginia Dare, America's first English child, was born there August 18, 1587. But something happened to the colony. A massacre, a flight, something. By 1590, they had disappeared. Presumably some intermarried with friendly Indians. Their descendants were these Roanoke Islanders, who lived in isolation and loneliness and called the rest of America "The States."

Remember Virginia Dare

Year after year the history-loving Islanders had staged commemorative christening exercises for Virginia Dare. With the exception of a few mainlanders who came over, it was a matter of local and obscure affairs. But in 1937, somebody had a bright idea. Two or three scenes from the lives of the lost colonists were staged. Carolinians heard about it and came flocking over in such numbers that three bridges had to be built to accommodate them.

The Islanders found they had something. They arranged a "lost colony" pageant. One day, Paul Green, Carolina playwright and Pulitzer Prize winner, came to see it. They talked to him. He agreed to write a play about the colony.

In 1937, with the help of the Federal government, the Islanders put on Paul Green's "The Lost Colony" ing to grab it I scurried by arm against the corner of a glass top bedstead. My brother, Paul, who was in town with the Cards, was the guy who was calling, doggone him."

Someone suggested there had been reports of a domestic squabble but Dean retorted his wife "has better control than that; if she was throwing anything it would have been a bean-ball, sure."

Sent home Sunday after Gabby Hartnett, Chicago Cub manager, discovered the injury. Dean and his wife, Patricia, hopped off the train Monday afternoon somewhat dazed at the mystery and rumors caused by the wound.

"Why, this is the silliest thing I ever heard of," he told baseball writers at the station. "Boys, you'll laugh your heads off when you get a look at this scratch on my arm."

"Fight? There wasn't any fight. And I wasn't drinking either. It happened right in the hotel. We went to our room at about 11:15 Saturday night. We were in bed when the phone rang, and, like a dummy, instead of turning the light on first I made a grab for the phone in the dark."

"I knocked over the lamp on the stand between the twin beds. In tryto see "The Lost Colony." Doanoke's local population of 100 swelled to 5,000. The island dressed and painted itself up but there were few accommodations of outsiders.

The Money Comes In

But "The Lost Colony" had brought something new to Roanoke—money. The Islanders, convinced of the worth of their show and determined to repeat it launched on an expansion program. Hotels and tourist homes and restaurants and stores went up. Men who had been fishermen became cooks, road-builders, clerks, guides, soda-jerkers, waiters. Planting became a major industry. Outsiders moved in, too. A dancer stayed the winter, worked as a reporter for a news syndicate and fished on a local boat.

The WPA reconstructed Fort Raleigh and built the "Waterside Theater."

Several actors from the WPA's Federal Theater in New York and North Carolina came down. They were supplemented by theater people from the University of North Carolina and by 175 native Islanders. On July 4, 1937, the "curtain" went up on a thrilling historical drama dealing with the events of 1587.

Seventy thousand visitors, including President Roosevelt, came to Manteo. The faith of the Islanders was rewarded. In the summer of 1938, over 100,000 came to see their play. That settled it. The play would become a permanent feature of life on the island. They rebuilt the "Waterside Theater" and enlarged it. They added facilities for the WPA actors who had to dive into the sea to remove makeup. They expanded their building program, set up a new brick schoolhouse and a two-engine fire-station.

And now "The Lost Colony" is playing its first season. And there is no more unemployment on Roanoke Island.

Gambling in Calcutta's Chinatown has been restricted to the Chinese, since the wives of Hindus complained their husbands spent all their money at the gaming tables.

Red Sox Owner, Tom Yawkey, Knew Yankees Couldn't Keep Up 800 Pace

36-Year-Old Yawkey Has Poured $4,000,000 Into Boston Baseball Club in Effort to Win the American League Pennant

By HARRY GRAYSON
NEA Service Sports Editor

Thomas Austin Yawkey poured $4,000,000 into the Boston American League franchise.

The 36-year-old multi-millionaire Yale Blue remodeled Fenway Park at a cost of $1,750,000.

He might just as well have built a new one, but from the outset he intended to have something worthwhile to put into a plant of which he is proud.

Tom Yawkey then set out to buy a pennant, something all baseball men wanted him he could not do.

He spent money like a drunken sailor or when a drunken sailor has it, but in much larger amounts.

He gave the Browns $40,000 and Merv Shea for Lloyd Brown and Rick Ferrell.

He paid Connie Mack $125,000 for Robert Moses Grove.

He gave Clark Griffith $250,000 and Lyn Lay for Joseph Edward Cronin.

He gave Connie Mack $150,000 and a couple of blokes named Oscar for James Emory Fox.

He made several other deals of major importance, and to many the laugh appeared to be on him when the Red Sox failed to get anywhere in particular.

Fourth place, sixth place, fifth place and second in 1938 was all that Yawkey got for his money, and there wasn't much consolation in the runner-up position with the Yankees running off with the marbles.

And things weren't much brighter this year when the Yankees were 13 1/2 games in front.

Made Boston Forget Sellout

By Frazee

I talked to him the night in Cleveland when the Red Sox made it nine straight by beating young Robert Feller from the premises and winning in the 10th after the Indians had tied the score with five runs in the ninth.

The Hub entry was fresh from taking five straight from the Yankees, making it seven out of the last eight from the world champions and eight out of 12 for the campaign.

"This club of mine has it and will get better," exclaimed Yawkey.

"I wasn't discouraged about the Yankee procession because no club ever has played 300 ball throughout the entire season."

"Why, we were 12 or 13 games above .500 when the Yankees led us by 13 1/2 games."

Yawkey explains that he spent all that money in Boston because he wanted to make the good people of the Hub forget the late Harry Frazee, who also came in from New York, milked the franchise for all it was worth, and then peddled Babe Ruth and all of the other Red Sox stars for what at the time were fabulous prices.

"I also needed the nucleus of a club and didn't care to wait to build it," he explains.

"We'll develop most of our players in the future."

Yawkey Was Against Breaking Up Champs

"We own Louisville of Class AA and Rocky Mount of Class B and have working agreements with Little Rock in Class AA; Saranton in A; Danville, Va., in B; Canton, O., in C, and Centerville, Md., in D."

"We have the 20-year-old Ted Williams clicking in the outfield, the 21-year-old Jim Tabor at third base, the 22-year-old Bobby Doer at second, and several promising young pitchers."

Yawkey had nothing but contempt for those in baseball who demand that rules be passed to curb the Yankees.

"Baseball is a 24-hour-a-day job," he pointed out.

"Why should the New York organization be penalized for its hustle and ability by those with less enterprise?"

"The only way to beat the Yankees is to beat them on the field."

Yawkey has done that. Meanwhile, Yawkey, who does not gave the Browns $40,000 and Merv Shea for Lloyd Brown and Rick Ferrell.

He paid Connie Mack $125,000 for Robert Moses Grove.

Mr. Thomas Austin Yawkey gets very tough these afternoons.

recommends baseball as an investment and who opposes the nocturnal version of it, works out and travels with his club.

He is one owner who really gets some fun out of the game.

Right now he is enjoying himself to the utmost.

Thomas Austin Yawkey looks for all the world like the cat that swallowed the canary.

San Francisco Pitchers

SAN FRANCISCO—Psychology and common sense play a big part in the training routine set up by Bobby Johnston, trainer of the San Francisco Seals. A Johnston invention is a four-pound iron ball which pitchers hold in their hands between innings.

When they take the hill the baseball feels easy to throw.

Johnston keeps a bucket of near-boiling water on an alcohol flame in the dugout for players to dip their hands into during night games. Often the chill at night contests is so great batters find it difficult to hold a bat.

day, Judge Dexter Bush transferred the cases of three young white girls, charged with burglary, to the county juvenile court. Their ages were from 12 to 16 years.

George Carson and Jack Cannon, negroes, pleaded guilty to petit larceny for stealing gasoline. Carson was fined $10 and costs, and sentenced to one hour in jail. The fine was suspended indefinitely. Cannon was fined $10 and costs and sentenced to one hour in jail. The court gave Cannon a stay of 60 days to pay the fine.

The case of Otha Megerson, charged with grand larceny, was continued to October. No cases were heard during the morning as Prosecuting Attorney Dick Huie was in session with the grand jury.

The old-time calomel was the doctor's favorite remedy for biliousness or so-called "Tropical Liver," so prevalent in hot weather, but it had some serious drawbacks from the standpoint of the patient. The nauseating and sickening after-effects and the necessity to follow it with a dose of Epsom salts made many of us hate to take it. Now you can really enjoy your calomel, for Calotabs make calomel-taking a pleasure. They give you the combined effects of calomel and salts without the disagreeable sensations. When you feel grouch and bilious take one or two Calotabs at bedtime with a glass of water or sweet milk. Next morning your system feels clean and refreshed, your head is clear, your spirit is bright, and you are feeling fine with a hearty appetite for breakfast. BETTER CHILD PICTURES

Your child pictures will be more interesting if they "tell a story." Show the child busy at something—such as this repair job. And don't take too far back.

VIRTUALLY every parent takes snapshots of the children—and would like to take better ones. It's not difficult to take a good child picture, and there's no subject more appealing. But most of these pictures can be made still better, if attention is paid to a few common, easily-corrected faults.

The commonest faults are: lack of "story" interest, wrong choice of background or setting, subject too far from camera, and movement which blurs the picture.

Almost any child snapshot will be better if it "tells a story." Simply give the child something to do—dress a doll, draw a picture, fix a toy wagon wheel, blow soap bubbles. Such activity adds interest to the picture—and also makes picture-taking more interesting for the child. Give a small baby a rattle or brightly-colored object to play with—it will arouse his interest, and you will get livelier, more expressive pictures.

Be careful in choosing backgrounds. Look beyond the subject—your camera lens will. Avoid a background that has a definite, obtrusive pattern, such as the side of a clapboarded house. And try for good contrast with the subject. For example, if the child is wearing light-colored clothes, a dark hedge may make a good background. A hilltop with the child against a sky background is also good.

Examine the child snapshots you have taken. If the subject appears too small in most of them, you're taking pictures at too great a distance. See if you can't get closer. It's easy with a focusing camera, or an inexpensive box or folding type that has a "two-point" focus setting. A portrait attachment is also useful for "close-ups" at three and one-half feet or even a bit nearer. You need not fear cutting off part of your subject, provided you locate the subject accurately in the view finder and then do not move the camera when making the exposure.

Movement—either of camera or subject—blurs the picture. Take care to hold the camera still at the moment you snap the shutter. And, with a box camera, pick a time when the subject is not moving rapidly. If you have a finer camera, use a shutter speed of 1/100 second or faster, with a correspondingly larger lens opening.

Watch these points in taking child snapshots. They're all simple, no trouble—and they'll insure you better pictures.

Louis Johnson Declares That U. S. Is Not Trying to Match Nazi Air Power

Assistant Secretary of War Outlines Some of Plans Made for Defense of United States and Geographical Frontiers

By LOUIS JOHNSON
Assistant Secretary of War
(Punch-hitting for Preston Grover, of vacation.)

WASHINGTON—Practically every day since Munich, in Washington and in every part of the country that I have visited, I have been asked these questions by newspaper men: "What is the state of our air defenses?" "How do we compare with Germany?"

Since newspaper reporters reflect most accurately the state of the public mind, I presume all of America seeks the answers to these two questions: "I am happy to state that our defenses on land, on sea and in the air have been strengthened and improved. In the air, especially, we have made significant progress."

In the year ending July 1, we received from the industry approximately 700 airplanes which, type for type, can be matched against the best produced anywhere in the world. During the same period we allotted new contracts for more than 800 planes which are in advance of many of the world's present outstanding models.

When Congress fully appropriates the money necessary to give us an air armada of 5,500 to 6,000 planes, we will be on the road toward achieving adequate national defense in the air for America.

Planes and the Men
By adequacy, we mean not only planes but skilled operators to fly them, trained combat crews to man them, experienced mechanics to maintain them, efficient equipment to protect them, ample bases to support them, men of outstanding leadership to command them, fundamental assets of a well-balanced air force in sufficient quantity and quality to defend the western hemisphere against the aggression today.

I emphasized the word "today" because no one can foretell what may be the developments of tomorrow.

SERIAL STORY GHOST DETOUR

BY OREN ARNOLD
COPYRIGHT, 1939, NEA SERVICE, INC.

Yesterday, the mining agent in cornered by Dick who wrings the truth from him—the agent is trying to serve the girls into selling—then Dick walks back into the ghost town jail. The girls watch all this as the agent flees.

CHAPTER XI

"DICK'S not the kind who would steal!" Roselee was declaring, once the girls were in bed that night. "Why would he take the money from the old shaft and hide it in the dungeon without telling us?"

"I don't like to think of him as under suspicion," murmured Christine.

They had watched Dick go back into the dungeon, and had seen the faint reflected glow of a flashlight from far back in the forbidding depths of the jail cells. Then, still crouching in the shadows, they had seen Dick come out empty-handed and go back down the street, and they knew he had concealed the money inside. The two girls had returned to the Ace High Hotel and gone to bed before 10 o'clock.

"I'm terribly upset, Christy. Honest I am."

"Roselee, do you suppose this man—Bancroft, wasn't it?—will try anything else? His mining company, I mean?"

"I don't know. But Dick will be on the lookout now, surely. He will take care of everything. He—he would have, I mean. What I mean—he"

Roselee was confused. Confused in her speech and—worse—in her own heart. Christine sensed it and shared it, and so reached out to squeeze her friend's arm.

"Tell me something, Roselee," she spoke tenderly. "Do you love Dick Bancroft?"

Roselee didn't answer. There was a long moment of silence and then distinct little sounds as of tears.

"You don't have to tell me, darling," Christine whispered then. "I know you do love him. I know how you feel now, too. I can't think he was planning to conceal the money from you. Why don't we go and ask him?"

"No!"
"At any rate there was some good news in it—the man said Goldcrest ore was valuable again. He even said there was a new outcropping worth a hundred dollars a ton, Roselee!"

"I don't...care!"

CHRISTINE was holding her friend's hand now as she lay there on her pillow for a long time, thinking. The hour wasn't late, and she thought back over all the events since school was out. She thought, too, of Roselee and Dick Bancroft—and of Franklin Larraway.

Franklin was gone tonight. Franklin had fallen for her, Christine knew, from the moment he had met her. A girl can sense such things, intuitively. It had been amusing then. Franklin was more boyish. Slender and rather shy, and unable to conceal his shyness with his forced geniality and banter. He was extremely loyal to his friend Dick.

Franklin had shown more and more refinement and lovability and intelligence as the days had passed. Christine had felt herself drawn to the larger, more commanding Richard Bancroft at first, just as Roselee had been. For one thing they had "discovered" Dick under dramatic circumstances, like a movie romance. There in twilight at the bank vault—goodness! And he was undeniably handsome. "But Franklin is every bit as good looking," Christy reminded herself now.

She wondered what had come over her. Somehow she had undergone a kind of spiritual change just lying here thinking. She wasn't sleepy. She wanted to think—to think about Franklin.

"And I made Franklin believe I was crazy about Dick!" Christine recalled, horrified now at the thought. "There, pointing the signboard he tried to be nice—tried to let me know—"

Now it was Christine's turn to cry, and she sobbed harder than Roselee had done, until both girls finally turned over their pillows and went to sleep in companionable misery.

MRS. HOGAN had a good breakfast for the three young people. At the table Roselee and Christine watched Dick expectantly, but he did not mention the previous night's affairs. The girls were keenly disappointed, especially Roselee. Dick had hidden the $12,000. Dick had secrets which he thought they didn't know, and he wasn't sharing them. Roselee's lovely face was dark with anxiety.

President Roosevelt hopes to go to Alaska after Congress adjourns. Congressmen would be happier if he'd bring a little Alaska to Washington before adjournment.

HOLLYWOOD.—Short takes: Director William Wellman and Actor Ernest Cossart got into a fender-and-bumper entanglement while trying to drive out of the Paramount garage the other evening. "Wild Bill" led with a remark and Cossart doubled him, in spades. The quarrel grew red hot, but just short of the fist-swinging stage Wellman intently and quietly, looked at the actor intently and said, "Say, I can use you—you sure do look mean when you're mad!" And he engaged him for the heavy role in "The Light That Failed."

A producer of quickie pictures was talking with a friend. "Things aren't mighty bad with me," he wailed. "I lost $50,000 on my last picture, and almost as much on the one before that. On the previous one I dropped about $75,000, and that was just after I'd lost $10,000 on that little musical."

"I should think you'd get out of the business," suggested the friend.

"Well," shrugged the producer, "I got to make a living!"

A few tourist automobiles were coming in by 9 and the young people had to serve as guides. It was Christine, though, who kept alert and at 11 saw Franklin Larraway's ratty old car coming across the Joshua tree desert before she heard its noise. She joined her little knot of tourist guests with one of Roselee's and hastened to meet Franklin.

The young man's eyes brightened with obvious pleasure when she came to his car. "You look fresh as a daisy!" "Your new cowgirl outfit is very becoming." She laughed a bit, happily. "Bring me anything, huh?"

She asked it casually, teasingly, as a child might have, and just as casually picked up the parcel at his side. If she had given it a thought at all she would have assumed that the parcel contained something for use at Goldcrest. It was a natural assumption. The ends—tools, souvenirs, cooking utensils, items of clothing, provisions and such—on trips in to town. And in a thoughtless instant Christine had shaken the loose wrapper off this parcel too.

A corkscrew, beautifully beaded, dropped out. "Oh!" she cried, staring. Franklin blushed, rather painfully. "Yeah," he finally managed, swallowing. "Yeah, I did. But you beat me to it, Christy. I—well I mean I forgot it was laying there on the seat. I intended to get it to Dick!"

"To—Dick?"
"Yeah, that's it! Dick! He, uh, he told me to bring it, for you, Christine. He's—well I guess he wanted to be nice and all, and I was going in to town, see? Maybe we better not tell him you've already seen it, see?"

Christine looked at Franklin, looked into his frank gray eyes. He was trying to be casual, trying to smile and laugh a bit. But Franklin wasn't a good actor and he wasn't getting away with it. Christine felt a sudden hurt within her. She knew Franklin was lying—she knew Dick hadn't ordered that parcel. She wasn't sure exactly what really had happened, but her heart told her that things were all mixed up some way. She felt her throat tighten and she was afraid she was going to cry again as she had cried last night. So she turned hastily away.

"Oh sure," she forced herself to say. "Don't tell him. It's sweet of him to think of me, wasn't it? You—you better hurry up and come to work!"
She hurried off. Tears had actually come, and not for the world would she have had him see them.

HARRISON IN HOLLYWOOD

How Ernest Cossart Bumped Into Both A Fender and a Job at the Same Time

HOLLYWOOD.—Short takes: Director William Wellman and Actor Ernest Cossart got into a fender-and-bumper entanglement while trying to drive out of the Paramount garage the other evening. "Wild Bill" led with a remark and Cossart doubled him, in spades. The quarrel grew red hot, but just short of the fist-swinging stage Wellman intently and quietly, looked at the actor intently and said, "Say, I can use you—you sure do look mean when you're mad!" And he engaged him for the heavy role in "The Light That Failed."

A producer of quickie pictures was talking with a friend. "Things aren't mighty bad with me," he wailed. "I lost $50,000 on my last picture, and almost as much on the one before that. On the previous one I dropped about $75,000, and that was just after I'd lost $10,000 on that little musical."

"I should think you'd get out of the business," suggested the friend.

"Well," shrugged the producer, "I got to make a living!"

A man has finally been added to the cast of "The Wizard," but you won't see his face or know his name. Metro couldn't resist having a pinch fender in the film, so the last scene will show Norma Shearer hurling herself into the arms of her husband, who will be a bit player with his back to the camera.

Greer Garson, who came to Hollywood and then was sent back to London for her first picture, "Mr. Chips," may have to return to England for her second. . . . Red-headed Dolly Haas, from Germany, has established a sitting record in Hollywood. For more than two years she waited at Columbia, smoothing out her accent, drawing paychecks, and never once facing a camera. Then Ernst Lubitsch put her under contract for a film, but the production was shelved. Now Warner Brothers have accepted her to play opposite Paul Muni in "We Are Not Alone," and she should go to work any day now.

It's Roland Young's story about the married vaudeville team who set out on a tour of the hinterlands. A few weeks later their manager received this wire: "Dolly died yesterday, but don't worry. I'm a wow as a single!"

When "Maizie" was released, Metro not only discovered that it had a surprise hit, but that it had an unpledged girl on its payroll. Ann Southern will be given other stories which had been planned for Jean Harlow. . . . "Modern Cinderella," the Irene Dunne-Charles Boyer flicker at Universal, is the product of 26 writers. . . . While the camera stared, Joan Crawford took a bath in a glass tub the other day. Cecil DeMille is still gnashing his teeth for not having thought of it first.

Gregory Ratoff is directing Leslie Howard in "Intermezzo" in Hollywood. Irving Hoffman recalls that 10 years ago Leslie Howard directed Gregory Ratoff in "Out of the Blue Sky," on Broadway. That was a play for which Clark Gable was tried out and rejected. . . . Visitors on the set of "Hollywood Cavalcade" all want to see Alice Faye and Don Ameche. Buster Keaton, Chester Conklin and Ben Turpin—who were greater stars in their day—aren't even recognized.

You couldn't find anything objectionable in "Judge Hardy's Children," but the film has been banned to youngsters in some foreign countries. Explained Belgian censors: "This film is hardly in conformity with our customs and morals in Europe. Flirting has not yet been admitted for children less than 16, and they are still less allowed to remonstrate with their parents."

But other countries permit the showing of brutalities which never would be permitted here. In Samuel Goldwyn's "The Real Glory," story of the Philippine uprising several of the scenes are being filmed in two versions. The "shocker" sequences, of torture and bloodshed, are for foreign release.
